In the coming weeks, FRIENDS will be confronted with one of our greatest preservation challenges to date. The owners of the individually designated City and Suburban Homes First Avenue Estate (the full-block complex from First to York Avenues between East 64th and East 65th Streets) have submitted an application for the demolition of 429 East 64th Street and 430 East 65th Street on the ground that they do not generate a sufficient economic return.

As you may recall, the owner’s opposition to preservation began over two decades ago. In August 1990, in one of its last moves before being dissolved, the Board of Estimate overturned the designation of 429 East 64th Street and 430 East 65th Street, two buildings in the complex. At the urging of FRIENDS and Council Member Jessica Lappin, the Landmarks Preservation Commission (LPC) began the process of re-designating these two properties in 2006. The owner then defaced the subject buildings by stripping them of their architectural details and resurfacing the exterior with garish red stucco. Despite these disfiguring alterations, the LPC re-designated the buildings, citing their seminal importance in the history of the development of affordable housing. The owner sued to overturn the designation, and subsequently lost their final appeal in June of last year. Following their defeat in the courts, the owner submitted their application for demolition on the basis of an economic hardship.

This is only the 18th hardship application that has been submitted to the LPC since the Landmarks Law was enacted in 1965. The LPC should only be asked to grant the demolition of a landmark under the most strenuous of circumstances, when the economic hardship is genuine and all other possible solutions have been exhausted. This application does not meet those criteria.

As stewards of the architectural legacy of the Upper East Side, we must do everything in our power to fight this hardship application. And now, we need your financial support to continue this endeavor. Please make a contribution to protect the First Avenue Estate, and the future of every landmark building in New York City.
Located at the northwest corner of Park Avenue and East 70th Street, in the heart of the Upper East Side Historic District, 720 Park Avenue was designed by eminent architect Rosario Candela in conjunction with the firm Cross & Cross. Completed in September 1929, a month before the stock market crash, this luxury apartment building epitomizes the architectural exuberance of the late 1920s and is a prime example of the development of Park Avenue in the early twentieth century. It was during this period that Park Avenue was transformed into an elegant boulevard, its apartment buildings creating the uniform street wall that is characteristic of the avenue today.

Above the 12th floor, the prim brick-and-limestone base of 720 Park Avenue devolves into a cacophony of setbacks, bay windows, chimneys, parapets and buttresses, evoking a Tudor-style manor house that has developed over centuries. Unfortunately, this idiosyncratic design allowed several opportunities for moisture infiltration, causing corrosion of the ferrous steel in the building’s skeleton. For the last eighty years, much of this structural steel framing had only been protected by a single layer of paint. Where the paint failed, the expansive forces of rust began to displace brickwork, limestone ashlers, and even entire parapets.

Walter B. Melvin Architects (WBMA) was retained by 720 Park Avenue to address these issues throughout the building. Repairs were initially performed on a triage basis but as more and more deterioration was discovered, WBMA soon recommended a full-scale restoration. This work eventually included reconstruction of parapets and building corners, masonry re-pointing, crack repairs, and cleaning. The decorative limestone—which exhibits a rich variety of preserved marine life remains—was salvaged, repaired and reinstalled. Work also included replacement of skylights, the repair of original iron drain pipes, and replacement of roofing and quarry tile at terraces.

The restoration of 720 Park Avenue was aided by the discovery of a collection of photographs in the building’s cellar. During initial construction, the building was photographed on a weekly basis, capturing the steel frame and masonry skin in various states of completion. The photographs also show original configurations of decorative masonry which have since been altered, possibly by Candela himself after the building was completed. This collection of photographs also helped establish the age of later additions, such as a terrace greenhouse. Project-related demolition work also revealed interesting historic artifacts such as steel hoisting clamps and cables that had not been removed post-construction, period newspapers within walls and traces of the original blue-green mortar.

Despite the intrusive nature of the restoration, the building has not been radically changed, a testament to the careful and thoughtful work that WBMA accomplished. The integrity of the building has been restored, without any detriment to its remarkable appearance. Both the building owners and Walter B. Melvin Architects should be applauded for their investment in the future of 720 Park Avenue.

Young Friends

As summer approaches, we are wrapping up our busiest school year to date, on target to reach a record number of students and schools! From lintels, gargoyles and stained glass to brownstone, limestone and brick, the buildings of the Upper East Side and East Harlem have functioned as an outdoor classroom for over 950 first and second graders this school year!

Some of our success can be attributed to the expansion of our partnership with the Museum of the City of New York. Schools participating in our three visit program have the opportunity to follow up with a bonus session at the museum as part of their “Grid” program. This optional course reinforces architectural concepts and explores how city planning helps ensure that communities serve the needs of their residents. Students learn the various zones of the city and construct a model neighborhood based on community needs conforming to Manhattan’s grid system. Many of our schools have enjoyed this new offering and the feedback from teachers and parents has been outstanding.

We love returning to our neighborhood schools each year, as we have become an integral part of their study of New York City. This year, we have encountered many new classrooms and hope they, too, will become old friends in the years to come.
Join FRIENDS for an exciting evening as we proudly honor Richard Ravitch at our Eighth Annual Ambassador to the Upper East Side Award Dinner on Thursday, September 15th.

Richard Ravitch, long-time resident of the Upper East Side, has been engaged in both private and public business for more than 40 years. In 1975, at the request of Governor Hugh Carey of the State of New York, Mr. Ravitch assumed the Chairmanship of the near-bankrupt New York State Urban Development Corporation, successfully keeping the corporation solvent and completing construction of 30,000 low-income housing units. He served as Chairman of the Metropolitan Transportation Authority for five years, reorganizing the MTA and improving the region’s transportation infrastructure. In 1988, he was the Chairman of the Charter Revision Commission of the City of New York.

In 1999, Congress created the Millennial Housing Commission to examine the federal government’s role in meeting the nation’s growing affordable housing challenges. Mr. Ravitch was appointed to serve as Co-Chair of the Commission which led a diverse group of 22 housing experts in an intensive 17-month process to rethink America’s affordable housing policy. In May 2002, the Commission presented its report to Congress, recommending a series of initiatives to create new housing tools, reform several current programs and streamline existing programs.

In 2008, at the request of Governor Paterson, Mr. Ravitch chaired a commission that designed a plan to finance the MTA. Most recently, Mr. Ravitch served as Lieutenant Governor of the State of New York.

With such outstanding company, this is sure to be an evening to remember! For inquiries please call 212-535-2526 or email info@friends-ues.org.

A LITTLE HELP FOR FRIENDS

Last fall, thirteen students from the Department of Architectural Technology, New York City College of Technology participated in the FRIENDS survey of Yorkville. Working in pairs, the students were responsible for surveying and photographing all the buildings on an assigned block.

The students were enthusiastic about their assignment. In the words of one, this “was the first time when I actually stood in front of a building trying to figure out the style, structure, materials, components, and conditions of a structure. It made me realize that I live in a city full of architectural history and that I knew so little about it. For me the survey was a great experience for the simple reason of actually realizing the beauty of each building.”

The experience also encouraged close observation of the built environment, an important skill for architects in training. Students learn more by doing than by merely reading. One student summarized, “In the beautiful skylines of our New York City, we can appreciate the contrast in style and age of buildings, and is a sight that enables us to go back and forth in time, a view that tells us where we have been and where we are at the moment. And that is why it is important to preserve historic landmarks, structures that remind us of our past achievements and serve as a source of identity and pride.”

New York City College of Technology, a unit of the City University of New York, is located in Brooklyn. City Tech, as it is commonly known, serves 15,368 full and part-time students; with approximately 900 students in the department of Architectural Technology. The overall student population reflects the immigrant experience of New York City: 41.7% were born outside of the United States; 60.8% report a language other than English spoken at home. Thirty-four percent of the students are Black, 31.7% Hispanic, 18.5% Asian and 11% White. Fifty-two percent of the students report household incomes of less than $30,000; 63.9% of continuing students receive need-based aid.

The project was a resounding success and I hope to find more eye-opening experiences for my next class of students.

A New Walk with FRIENDS

Last fall, the National Trust for Historic Preservation announced that Friends of the Upper East Side Historic Districts was awarded a grant from the Elizabeth and Robert Jeffre Preservation Fund for New York City. This generous grant will help us redesign and print Walk with Friends, our architectural and cultural guide to the Upper East Side.

Since it was originally produced, Walk with Friends has reached thousands, introducing visitors and reacquainting long time residents to the cultural and architectural gems of our neighborhood. It features detailed maps of each of the Upper East Side’s historic districts, descriptions of all 126 individual landmarks, and bits of fascinating history. However, with the 2010 expansion of the Upper East Side Historic District, Walk with Friends is now out of date. To celebrate this monumental accomplishment, we have begun to redesign and update our map and guide.

Thanks to the National Trust for Historic Preservation and the Elizabeth and Robert Jeffre Preservation Fund for New York City, our new version of Walk with Friends will reach your mailboxes this fall!
